Dr. Kristi Britton is a respected leader and consultant for the National Center for Executive Leadership and School Board Development. She is passionate about creating support systems in districts, schools, and government agencies to improve learning opportunities through effective leadership and mentoring. She is a veteran educator who has served in various teaching and leadership roles in her 21 years of distinguished service including as a high school teacher and mentor, co-administrator, principal, Director of Special Education, and an adjunct professor at Brandman University.

Dr. Kristi Britton has been recognized for her outstanding record of district leadership by the Association of California School Administrators (ACSA) as the 2008-09 Region 7 Co-Administrator of the Year and 2018-19 Special Education Administrator of the year. She has presented at numerous conferences on a variety of topics and has served as mentor for new administrators. She has created special education systems and procedures which have reduced the number of students in special education, increased inclusion opportunities, and significantly lowered the cost of services and programs while continuing to provide a high- quality instructional program for special education students.

Dr. Kristi Britton provides valuable leadership expertise in guiding leaders through difficult and complex challenges. Her years of experience in leadership development, mentoring, special education, educational change and trainings have equipped her to effectively lead others in a collaborative yet systemic way.
